

Types of feedback

In the session 'What makes assessment effective', Mick Walker explained that there were four questions you should ask yourself when deciding on the purpose and design of your assessment. The final question was:

- How are you going to feed back the information to pupils?

When giving feedback, you want pupils to be able to access it and, crucially, be able to act on it. The next sections are going to look at additional ways to address the 'how' you could feed back information about learning to your pupils.

It will cover:

- Written feedback
- Symbol marking
- Verbal feedback

Consider your personal development needs and select two of the feedback methods to review.
